MAN KILLED ON RAILROAD

Western Maryland Kills Man Stealing a Ride. Had been Warned to Keep off of Trains. Body Terribly Mangled.

A sad accident occurred between Smithsburg and Edgemont about 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon when Arthur Saum of Hagerstown was run over by a Western Maryland freight train on which he was riding and instantly killed.

It is not known how the accident occurred, but it is thought that Saum was under the car, and while going down Raven Rock Hill was jolted from his perch and thrown under the car.

Saum, it is said, frequently made these Sunday trips on the freight although warned by his parents. Sunday he was with several other boys and were evidently on their way to Pen Mar where they usually go on Sunday.

The wheels of the car passed over the body of Saum, severing both legs at the hip, and causing almost an instant death. An arm was also cut off.

States Attorney Armstrong accompanied by Acting Coroner Ferguson, of Smithsburg, viewed the body and after ascertaining the facts, deemed an inquest unnecessary.

HOLLY BRICK PLANT SOLD

After being in existence but about twelve years, one of the largest and most stupendous manufacturing concerns ever located in this section of the state was sold at public sale on Friday afternoon, the sale being the plant of the Mt. Holly Brick and Clay Company, of Mt. Holly Springs.

The plant was started by an organized company composed principally of Harrisburg capitalists, in 1888, with some heavy mortgages from the beginning. Since its beginning the plant has never been a success and for about two or more years the plant has been closed down. Several hundred thousand bricks were on hand, and there have been sold off. Bricks were manufactured from the refined white clay taken from the mountains near Mt. Holly, and were of very hard and excellent quality, but very light in color.

The sale was the result of a bill in equity brought by the Commonwealth Trust Company of Harrisburg, to foreclose a first mortgage of $30,000.

The plant was not sold as a whole, there being no bidder in that manner, but was sold in three parts.

The machinery and equipments, including the kilns, but excluding the land, buildings and railroad siding, were purchased by William and Freeman, of Harrisburg, for $3,025.

The land, buildings and railroad siding were sold to Simon Michlovitz also of Harrisburg, for $1,630.

The property at Henry Clay, located along the Gettysburg & Harrisburg railroad about seven miles south of Mt. Holly Springs, and consisting of boiler, engine, car washing machinery, tools, mine rails etc., was sold to the Harrisburg Iron & Steel company for $140,000.

The Holly plant consists of a tract of land containing about nine and a half acres, located in the borough of Mt. Holly Springs, with a plant 362 feet long and 80 feet wide at one end and 120 feet at the other end, and all necessary small buildings, kilns and machinery for the manufacture of brick. The plant has a capacity of 1,050,000 bricks.

The first cost of the plant was between $175,000 and $200,000.

FACTS ABOUT ENCAMPMENT

Items of Interest Regarding the Big Encampment Just Closed. Almost Two Hundred Thousand One Cent Stamps Sold.

The encampment just closed was notable in many ways among which were the following:

There were three governors in attendance at camp, Governor Stuart, of Pennsylvania; Governor Fort, of New Jersey; and Governor Mann, of Virginia. Assistant Secretary of War Robert Shaw Oliver spent July 4 in camp and many high Army officers were there at one time or another.

The regulars and militia received $160,000 during their stay here, a large portion of which was left in Gettysburg. With the exception of the Pennsylvania soldiers all were paid by the United States Government. Pennsylvania troops were paid by Adjutant General Thomas J. Stewart. The District of Columbia troops were paid on their way to the trains Sunday morning.

During the month of July stamps to the amount of $2361.08 were sold at the Gettysburg post office, more than half of which was paid for one cent stamps. The demand for souvenir post cards accounts for this, 192,703 one cent stamps being sold during the month.

There were in camp for the month between 1800 and 2000 regulars, while between 8,000 and 10,000 militia were here at one time or another.

The sanitary condition at the camp has never been excelled anywhere. During the first period of the camp there was less than three quarters of one per cent of sickness. On the other hand there were a number of more or less serious accidents, bones being broken and other injuries sustained. All will recover, it is thought, though one man had to have his leg amputated after he was removed to the Walter Reed hospital at Washington.

The damage claims made by farmers were considered very reasonable by Major Boughton, provost marshal, and the farmers were very well satisfied with the adjustments made. There was only one case reported of an unjust demand. A farmer claimed that not an apple was left in his orchard after the troops passed that way. Investigation showed that the trees were bending almost to the ground from the weight of the fruit.

There was not a railroad accident in which troop trains played a part. The trains were well handled during the big encampment. Private Routh, of the 29th Infantry was hurt on the railroad at Reading on his way here, dying from his injuries several days later but he was not with his command at the time of the accident.

The amount of money left in Gettysburg by the encampment can not be accurately estimated. The Army people bought their provisions in town whenever possible and not a few business houses were benefitted.

NEW PANTOMIME PLAY

The most popular entertainment in high class vaudeville today in pantomime work. In all big vaudeville theatres the headliner act is invariably a pantomime act. European actors have brought many such acts to this country.

Mr. Wellington who is directing the production of "A New York Roof Garden by Night" will present an act in pantomime "A Monk's Love" introducing Nevins famous song "The Rosary". It will be the first act of its kind ever seen in Gettysburg, in fact the director has never produced it. He will be assisted by Miss Ruth Buchler, and it might be mentioned that in this act Miss Buchler will be seen in a new Parisian gown. Many of Mr. Wellington's friends are looking forward with great interest to the first presentation of his latest act.

The entire stage at Walter's Theatre will be used for this production. It is the first time too that a production has required the full stage.

The special roof garden stage has been erected. Special scenery is being placed for the production.

PEACHES ALREADY SHIPPED

Another sure sign of a big peach crop is the heavy sale of fruit packages that has already been made. It is estimated that about twenty carloads of fruit packages have already been sold in the Smithsburg-McPleville belt. The cost of a carload of baskets ranges from $480 to $510. It is roughly estimated that about $15,000 worth of packages have been sold already in Washington county.

In Memoriam

In loving remembrance of my dear mother, Mrs. Adeline Weible who died August 1st 1908, just two years ago today.

Dear mother, thou art gone; thou hast left us.
Here our loss, we deeply feel;
Christ has called thee; He hath bereft us.

But, He can all our sorrows heal.
Oh, how well we loved thee.
But thy spirit has taken its flight:
Forever with Christ to dwell,
In the beautiful mansion so bright.

We shall never forget thy kindness and love.
While thy voice in death is still'd,
A place in our midst, has been made vacant.

Which never can be filled.
Thy weary hands have ceased to toil.
For those that thou loved best,
Thou hast entered the realms of happiness and bliss.

Where the weary are at rest.
Thy labor of love, on earth is done.
Thou hast finished thy course;
Thou hast kept the faith.
Thy victory over death and the grave is won.

Thy loving kindness, in our hearts we shall ever cherish,
Our fervent love for thee shall never perish.

We hope to meet thee in the heavenly mansion above,
Where all is joy and peace and love.

By her daughter, Mrs. O. G. Paughman.

PAYING COPPER

It has long been known that there is copper in South Mountain, for the Western Maryland Railroad had to alter its line near Blue Ridge Summit, which it struck the hard ore along the originally projected route in the early seventies.

A recent government bulletin, issued by the geological survey, tells of copper deposits in various parts of the United States, and of those in the South Mountain, says:

"Near South Mountain, Pennsylvania, copper in the shape of blebs, grains and wires is associated with ancient lavas, particularly with the greenstone that is so widespread in that region. Traces of copper are found for eight miles, from the Gettysburg pike to a point beyond the Maryland state line. Most of the prospects are at stream crossings, where the overlying rocks have been worn away.

The copper was brought up from the interior of the earth with the lava, but was then very finely disseminated through the mass and was worthless. Later it was concentrated in veins by hot circulating waters, which dissolved it and later redeposited it on the walls of cavities and in other places. These deposits which are described by G. W. Stone, have been known for 70 years, but have not yet proved to be commercially important. Systematic search, however, might reveal valuable deposits."

The advance chapter containing the reports is numbered 430-B and may be had by apply to the director of the survey at Washington.

CAMP MAJOR GENERAL GOBIN

Major General Wendall P. Fowman, of Philadelphia, commanding the National Guard has issued a general order designating that the National Guard camp at Gettysburg this month shall be known officially as "Camp Major General J. P. S. Gobin." This order will be sent throughout the state at once so that the camp may be so referred to. This compliment to the late commander is generally appreciated. For years the camps have been called after distinguished Pennsylvania soldiers and the tribute to Gobin is notable because he served in every camp for twenty years or more and had a splendid war record.

VATICAN HOPES FOR UPRISING

Denounces Spanish Premier and Expects Revolt.

PREDICT RELIGIOUS WAR

Injection of Carlists into the Fight is Viewed With Great Alarm by the Conservatives.

Rome, Aug. 1.—Severely condemning Premier Canalejas for premeditating the rupture between Spain and the church, the Vatican in a semi-official statement expresses the hope that Don Jaime, the Carlist pretender to the Spanish throne, will start a revolution and raise the Carlist flag and "vindicate" the Roman Catholic church.

The recall of Marquis De Ojeda, the Spanish ambassador to the Vatican, has created a big sensation in Rome, despite the fact that the relations have been strained for some time. Officials of the Vatican are taking the darkest view of the situation, and freely predict that a religious war will come.

It is pointed out that through the Battenburgs, the English Protestant influence is exercised upon the king, and that there is, in addition, the French Free Masonic influence, the two forces admitting of no possibility for anything but a prolonged struggle.

Conservatives Fear Revolution.

Madrid, Aug. 1.—There is great excitement at the capital and throughout the kingdom, numerous small uprisings or demonstrations occurring in the last twenty-four hours. Each side in the struggle has made it apparent that it will adhere stubbornly to its policies.

Likelihood of the injection of the Carlists into the fight and the return of Don Jaime is viewed with great alarm by the conservative elements. The pretender sees an opportunity to realize his aspirations, and it is thought he will avail himself of the chance.

The controversy between the Vatican and Spain had its inception four or five years ago when the monastic institutions in Spain were brought under the law. About the same time France became involved in a similar difficulty, marking a trend of thought and action that is slowly extending through Italy and Portugal.

Concordat Remodeled.

Subsequent to this movement to bring the religious order under state control, Spain sought to remodel its concordat of 1851 with the Vatican. The agreement whereby the state contributed $8,250,000 to the support of the Roman Catholic clergy.

Governments came and went during the struggle, four falling in one period of three months—November, 1908, to January, 1909, and now the throne of King Alfonso totters.

Among the first steps taken to remodel the concordat was to make civil marriage obligatory. Then the state permitted soldiers to refuse to attend mass. It prevented the priests of the orders from appropriating the perquisites of the parish pastors. It dissolved all orders not having political rights in the state. It gave state officials the right to enter and inspect the religious houses, and finally it made all religious orders pay taxes.

Non-Catholic bodies were barely permitted to exist before these conditions began to take place. They were made to have their church doors on side streets and that resembled in any manner ecclesiastical architecture. Neither were they permitted to make any visible sign of worship.

Crisis Reached in June.

The crisis was reached when a revision of the concordat was made on June 11, permitting Protestant bodies to display insignia of public worship. This decree elicited a storm of protest from the Catholics, that resulted in recalling the Spanish ambassador to the Vatican.

"A war for religious freedom" is what the Protestants choose to call the trouble.

Premier Canalejas defined his position a week ago, saying the aim of the state was to "Europeanize and modernize Spain."

Don Jaime has issued a manifesto to the Carlist members of parliament commending them on their stand in favor of the pope.

"I think the day is not far distant," he said, "when my followers must rally to our flag."

Woman Parades 50 Years as Man.

Taunton, Mass., Aug. 1.—The death of John Coulter, for many years a familiar figure at the North End, revealed the fact that "John" was a woman. For fifty years she had lived in this city without her real sex being discovered. The body will be buried as "John," and in male attire.

Killed Testing Fast Car.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 1.—While testing a racing automobile at the speedway, D. T. Dyer, a mechanic, lost control of his car, which plunged through the inside fence, turning over on a pile of stones. Dyer died of his injuries shortly afterward.

BERRY PICKERS' HEAVY LOSS

Their Pay Drops $500 a in One Small Region.

Mahanoy City, Pa., Aug. 1.—Statistics compiled by local dealers in huckleberries show this season's crop to be more than 50 per cent. less than last year's, when the daily shipments to market for July averaged 118 tons. A year ago pickers realized from this source $1000 a day, or more than the payroll of the largest colliery in this section for the same time. Forest fires and extreme heat killed this year's yield.

MAN GAVE GIRL POISON IN CANDY

Young Woman of Blades, Del., in Critical Condition.

Laurel, Del., Aug. 1.—Miss Loretta Tunny, of Blades, is in a precarious condition from strychnine poisoning. The poison is thought to have been administered in candy.

Soon after dinner Miss Tunny ate three small pieces of chocolate candy, given her, it is alleged, by a man who has been an admirer. She was taken ill and went into convulsions. A physician of this city who was summoned administered counteragents, and on certain hopes of saving the girl's life. The greatest excitement prevails. A mob has been around the Tunny home all evening, and should she die violence is almost sure to follow.

BIG BISCUIT COMPANY

Independents Will Organize $30,000,000 Concern.

New York, Aug. 1.—An independent biscuit and cracker company will be organized in Wilmington, Del., capitalized at $30,000,000. It aims to control 75 plants throughout the country. The name will be the Federal Biscuit Company. It will start with a capitalization of $30,000,000, divided into $15,000,000 of preferred and $15,000,000 of common stock.

Hartwell B. Grubbs who is to head the new corporation, is a Tennesseean by birth. He accumulated a fortune in St. Louis as a cracker manufacturer before organizing the Consumers' Biscuit company, with headquarters in New York. He is a cousin of Secretary of War Dickinson and is president of the Missouri Society of New York.

A meeting of the directors to complete the organization will be held here, when announcement of the details will be made. George W. B. own, of Wilmington, is counsel for the company.

TWO NEGROES LYNCHED

Hanged by Mob After Confessing to Murder of Girl.

Boniface, Fla., Aug. 1.—After having confessed to the murder of Bessie Morrison, a 12-year-old daughter of Mrs. Mary Morrison, near Dady, in the northwestern part of Holmes county, two negroes were taken from the officers and lynched by a mob of infuriated citizens. They were hanged.

Child's Body Found in Lake.

Glens Falls, N. Y., Aug. 1.—With the head, feet and hands missing, the body of Beatrice Renaud, the 7-year-old child of Mrs. John Renaud, of White Hall, who disappeared about seven weeks ago, was found floating in the Lake Champlain harbor, not far from the place where the houseboat from which the child disappeared was moored. If she was murdered, the police will leave no stone unturned to bring her murderer to justice.

The Weather.

Fair today and tomorrow; north west winds.

Swamp muck might be used on many a farm to good advantage as an absorbent of the moisture and liquids in the stable manure. Such treatment would arrest the dissipation and decomposition of fertilizing elements, while the muck soil would furnish a type of humus that the average soil stands much in need of. For winter use in cold latitudes the absorbent could be thoroughly dried during the summer months and stored under cover where it would be available.

CRIPPEN AND TYPIST CAUGHT

Alleged Murderer Glad Chase is Over.

THE GIRL COLLAPSES

Dressed as a Boy, She Denies Knowledge of Crime and Becomes Hysterical—Will be Taken to London.

Father Point, Quebec, Aug. 1.—Dr. Hawley H. Crippen and his typist, Ethel Clara Leneve, attired in boy's clothes, were arrested by Canadian police on board the liner Montrose, being charged with the murder of the physician's wife, Belle Elmore Crippen, the flesh of whose body was found buried in quicklime in the cellar of their London home.

Dr. Crippen took his arrest quietly. "I am the man," he said, when approached by Chief McCarthy and Chief Dennis, of the Dominion police, and being pointed out as the fugitive by Inspector Dew, of Scotland Yard.

Miss Leneve was found in her stateroom, dressed as a boy and badly frightened. She collapsed utterly when placed under arrest. Becoming hysterical, she was given in charge of a physician, who will remain at her bedside.

It is reported that Dr. Crippen admitted knowledge of his wife's tragic death, but how far his confession went is not disclosed.

Miss Leneve denied having any connection with the crime. A quantity of jewelry was found in her stateroom. Belle Elmore owned many diamonds, which were not found in the London home.

To Be Deported.

The Montrose is proceeding, with the prisoners on board, to Quebec, where they will be arraigned before Judge Panet Angers, the purpose being to deport them to London. It is likely that Inspector Dew will board the Royal George for the return trip with his prisoners on Thursday.

As soon as the Montrose was sighted, Inspector Dew and the Canadian chiefs put off in a small boat, disguised as pilots, wearing the regulation blue cloth suits, with white coverings on their hats. With them went Francois Gaudreau, the pilot who is taking the Montrose to Quebec.

The press representatives followed in the pilot's tender, and by the time they arrived alongside the Montrose Crippen and his erstwhile typewriter had been arrested.

The arrest was made in full view of Dr. Crippen's fellow passengers. He made no resistance.

Dr. Crippen, attired in a great coat, was on deck. Inspector Dew recognized him, and at a nod the officers placed him under arrest.

They then proceeded to Miss Leneve's cabin, where she was found attired in boy's clothes. She also was taken into custody.

Immediately a simple signal, previously arranged, was sent out by wireless from the Montrose, and in a few seconds the wireless was carrying the news of the arrest to all parts of the United States and Canada and over the seas to England, where the outcome of Inspector Dew's trip was awaited with the greatest anxiety.

Go to Limer in Skiff.

It was 8 o'clock when those on board the boat saw a small craft put out from shore at Father Point through the fog and make for the Montrose. Apparently there were in the skiff four pilots, for there were that many men attired in the regulation uniform.

While this little boat was nearing the ship two men were pacing back and forth on the lower deck. One was in the uniform of the ship's surgeon. It was Dr. Stewart. His companion was an ordinary looking man in a gray coat. He was smooth-shaven, lean and wiry and extremely nervous. That was Crippen.

The fugitive leaned his elbows on the rail and watched the approach of the little craft. Even then there may have come to him some premonition of his impending arrest.

"There seems to be a good many pilots about that boat, doctor," remarked Crippen.

Dr. Stewart shrugged his shoulders. "Yes, there seems to be about six," he answered carelessly.

Kept Eye on Approaching Officers. Crippen kept his eyes on the pilot boat and watched Inspector Dew come over the rail.

As the Scotland Yard officer walked slowly past Crippen the detective nodded. This was the signal to the Dominion police that the long hunt was over.

"Dr. Crippen," said Chief McCarthy, "we want you in connection with the death of your wife in London."

McCarthy and his companions watched the man closely lest he make some move to spring overboard or to kill himself in some other way.

He did not do this thing.

In Typist's Stateroom.

The next move was toward the cabin occupied by Miss Leneve. The officers found her dressed in boy's clothes and pallid with fright.

Like her companion, she made no attempt to conceal her identity, but sat on the side of her berth weeping bitterly. She collapsed and became hysterical, and a doctor was called and put in constant attendance upon her.

The examination of the two—Crippen, weary and resigned; the woman, weeping and only half conscious of what she was saying—began at once.

Just how far Crippen went in explaining his connection with the murder of his wife the police refuse to divulge. He expressed relief, however, that his suspense had ended.

As soon as the brief interview with the authorities was over, Miss Leneve put on woman's garb for the first time since she came aboard.

Crippen was so exhausted that he threw himself on his berth and fell into a heavy sleep, which resembled stupor.

INSANE MOTHER SLAYS 4 CHILDREN

Strangled and Drowned Her Babies in a Tub.

San Francisco, Aug. 1.—Five young children of Mrs. Joseph Mello, wife of wealthy rancher, near Brentwood, were drowned by their mother.

Mrs. Mello was evidently driven insane by the loneliness of the country. She lived in a big farmhouse with her husband and children, the oldest being Chester, 14 years old. No servant was employed. After writing letters to her relatives, telling them she was desperate through loneliness, she took the five children into the kitchen and deliberately set about killing them.

First she strangled little Ramon, a 4-year-old girl, and then drowned her in a wash tub. Leona, a 2-year-old girl, came next. She snatched the baby from the arms of her brother and killed the child like the others. Then she seized the twin babies, five months old, and plunged them in the tub. Little Chester, who had vainly tried to stop his mother's dreadful work, rushed out into the yard and screamed for help. Sheriff Veale happened to be passing in an automobile and he responded. He tried to resuscitate the twins. He took the mother and placed her under arrest and in a hospital. The mother cried constantly.

To the sheriff Mrs. Mello told a story of her lonely, blank existence in the country, an existence shadowed with constant horror of impending insanity, which she confessed had carried off her mother, her sister and her brother.

MANIAC SLAIN, KILLS OFFICER

Calls Police to His Home and Shoots From Ambush.

WAS RIDDLED BY POSSE

Insane Man Entrenches Himself on Crest of Culm Pile—Police Advance in a Body.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 1.—George Kent, a patrol wagon driver, 24 years old, sacrificed his life to a maniac's delusion. The maniac, Frank Stout, was driven to a culm bank near his home, in Wheeler place, by the police, surrounded, and after a few minutes skirmishing he fell riddled with bullets.

Kent was sent with his wagon, filled with policemen, to answer a call which came from Stout's home. The person who called the police said that his home had been threatened by Italians with bombs. Wheeler place is a court of four houses, Stout's home being one of the four. When the patrol wagon arrived there the officers went to Stout's home, leaving Kent at his place on the wagon. Mrs. Stout said no Italians had been near the house, and that there was nothing to occasion a visit by the police. She said her husband was out, only she and the children being at home.

Shot From Ambush.

Just as the police were about to turn away three shots rang out. Two of the policemen ran back to the wagon and found Kent lying on the ground from bullet wounds in both temples and in the right side. His horses were dashing up the street. As the startled and puzzled policemen were bending over Kent, Stout appeared on a culm bank nearby, flourishing a rifle and yelling at the policemen.

"What are you fellows doing there? Get out of that," he cried, leveling the rifle as if about to fire. But instead he turned and ran up the side of the bank and fell on his face. Every few minutes he raised his head and peered at the officers and then buried his face in the bank again.

Word was sent to headquarters of the shooting, and Chief of Police Day ordered a force of twenty policemen out with riot guns to capture the murderer. Mayor John Von Bergen, who lives nearby, left a sick bed to direct the capture. The policemen, all armed to the teeth, were distributed around the culm pile and the advance began.

Bullets Riddle Maniac.

Stout immediately opened fire. The police responded, aiming to cripple the maniac and capture him. They crept up on him, keeping as much to the shadow as possible, while Stout could be seen easily standing against the sky line, waving his gun and hurling epithets at the police to come on and capture him. His ammunition exhausted, he threw his gun away and began firing with a small revolver which he carried in his belt.

"Come on, d— you," Stout shouted. But the words were hardly out of his mouth before he pitched forward, shot through the neck with a rifle ball. He died almost instantly. Fully fifty shots were exchanged in the encounter.

After an inquiry in the neighborhood the police learned that Stout had summoned the patrol wagon, using the telephone in a fire station near his home. He was 35 years old and a stonemason. Neighbors say he recently returned to the city after a long absence, but no explanation is given for the madness which evidently came upon him with such suddenness.

JOHN G. CARLISLE WEAKER

Former Secretary of the Treasury in Critical Condition.

New York, Aug. 1.—The remarkable vitality of John G. Carlisle, secretary of the treasury under Cleveland, triumphed again over the depression which attacked him, and to the surprise of his physicians, he is resting comfortably.

His condition remains critical, however, and despite his rally he is weaker than he was.

Congressman Tirrell Dead.

Natick, Mass., Aug. 1.—Charles Quincy Tirrell, congressman from the Fourth Massachusetts district, died suddenly at his home here. Death was caused by a cerebral hemorrhage and came as a great shock to the members of his family and his many friends. His wife, Mrs. Mary Tirrell, and his son, Arthur, who is also his private secretary, were with him at the time he died.

Uses Dynamite to Kill Himself.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Aug. 1.—An unidentified man committed suicide in sight of several persons by blowing himself to pieces with dynamite. He walked into a field near the barracks of Troop B of the state constabulary, where he laid down, placed a stick of dynamite on his chest, lighted the fuse, and before the people who saw him realized what he was doing he was blown to pieces.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

He was from childhood a lady killer. As a boy in knickerbockers he had given the little girls of his acquaintance flowers and invited them to have ice with him. They were not old enough to quarrel about him, but they doted on him all the same. As a youth he resembled a young Byron with his large blue eyes, his negligent flaxen hair and round white throat. Then came young manhood. By this time he found more zest in his attentions to girls, though fewer pleased him. He and they were still young enough to feel the sweetness of a flirtation, and occasionally when the denouement came he was obliged to admit to him self that he had been singled.

He had no thought of marriage, a home, children. He didn't consider himself old enough for that. When he reached twenty-seven he began to look forward to it as something that would naturally come about. At thirty-five he wished that it would come about. At forty he began to fear that it would never come. Then it occurred to him that he had better try to bring it about. But by this time young girls had begun to consider him an elderly man. And, as for those near his own age, he had no use for them. He knew that men of forty have on rare occasions married girls half their age and both husband and wife been very happy in each other. Why not he? He resolved to make an effort.

An effort in love! He had glided naturally into so many affairs of the heart that to try to get into one seemed repugnant to him. Why had he not taken advantage of some one of these affairs to preclude the possibility of the lonely old age that was overshadowing him—why? He knew well enough why. He had always considered the game, not the reality. To have taken one of the girls he might have had would have been to give up a conquest. At least so he had regarded it at the time.

Having lost his position at home of a young man and consequently not being thrown in with young girls, he determined to go elsewhere. It was the season of outing, and he determined to go wife hunting by the sea. He had made many conquests there. Moonlight shimmering on the dancing waves had called out that which had moved many a girl to love him. True, now there were gray hairs in his moustache, and his Byronic forehead was higher than it had been, but he thought with the same surroundings he might do the trick as he had often done it before.

It was said to see a young girl pass him without looking at him, whereas twenty years ago another of her age could not have refrained from a glance. He became acquainted with several of them, but somehow there seemed a gulf between him and them that he could not cross. These were half or less than half his age. Finally he met one between twenty-five and thirty who caught his fancy. There was this, too, about her that he did not find in the younger ones—they surprised him by acting and talking in a way that seemed childish to him. They seemed to him to have grown nearer the nursery than their prototypes. Surely the girls he had associated with when he was under twenty-five were not as frivolous as these misses. The older girl, on the contrary, talked and acted like a woman. She could be a companion to him.

He made up his mind that if he could win her he would do so. He made a few abortive efforts to make love as he would have made it fifteen or twenty years before. What he would have said and looked and acted then now seemed insipid to him. He desisted, contenting himself with the girl's companionship and showing her little attentions.

One thing troubled him. Though she accepted his attentions and listened to his chat, she did not seem to be impressed with his superior wisdom. He felt that, while she attended to what he said, she occasionally let it be known that she knew more of the subject he was talking about than he knew himself. Surely there was nothing near the nursery here. He was uncomfortable at the thought that this young woman felt him intellectually beneath her. It was rather that he felt her to be his superior.

When the season was drawing to a close he wished to bring matters to a focus. This used to be easy enough when he was a youngster playing a game. But now that he was a middle-aged man, intending to tell a mature young woman that he loved her and ask her to be his wife, it seemed that the many times he had done the same thing came up to mock him.

However, he got it out. "How times change us!" she said. "A dozen years ago, when I was sixteen, you proposed to me, and you did it beautifully. Then I thought you a god. Now, being older, I know you for a very admirable and pleasant gentleman. I thank you for the honor done me, but I am not now minded to marry."

He looked at her with a dazed expression, vainly trying to recall her as she was. But about the time of their former meeting he had proposed to two many girls, and he was unable to distinguish her from the rest. He arose in silence and retired.

He returned disengaged and is still a bachelor. His forehead extends to the back of his neck, his teeth are going, and he is alone.

Injury Will Result From Too Much Pampering.

The great secret of properly developing a young sow into a sure and regular breeder is in giving her liberal feeding and good treatment until she is ready to breed her first litter of pigs. Feed for bone and muscle and constitution, and feed only those feeds that are adapted for the desired growth.

The ideal combination of feed with which to properly grow and develop a bunch of uniform sows from the time they are weaned until they are ready to be bred for their first litters should contain plenty of forage. Clover, alfalfa and blue grass (all three if possible), supplemented with some milk feed, skim milk and pure water, form a ration that would be hard to improve upon for giving good growth, health and vigor. Wheat middlings are one of the best milk feeds and when fed with skim milk in the form of a thick slop make a very palatable feed.

The location of the herd will make considerable difference in the choice of feeds, and there are numerous feeds that may be used with good results, the main object being to keep them growing every day and not becoming too fat.

At times when pasture is not available a little alfalfa or clover run through an ordinary cutting box and steamed and mixed with their rations will produce good results. It makes the best feed to keep a pig's digestive apparatus in good working order.

Ground oats is another excellent grain for feeding with other feeds for a month or six weeks before it is desired to breed the gilts. It insures the best development of the organs of maternity, and my experience has led me to believe that if all animals were fed ground oats as a part of ration there would be less trouble on account of shy or nonbreeders that are now so common, especially in pure bred herds.

Keep the yard and houses clean and allow no old or soiled feed to accumulate in the feeding troughs. Provide an abundant supply of cold water, protection from the heat during the summer and a dry sleeping place and good nests. These are all necessary factors, and it will be found impossible to grow and develop good breeding animals unless they are looked after.

Ninth Inning.

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Company.

WELL, I've been playing in the minors now for about eight years, and I've seen but once what you might call a baseball romance. I was on the inside of that one though.

It was the year I was holding down sack No. 2 for Plymouth in the Corn Belt league, and it happened right on our team, with Dan Moran, our first baseman, and Harry Nolan, our star pitcher, doing the heavy work. The third party was Julia Moriarty, as pretty a girl as ever sat in a grand stand—and a hot fan too. She knew the batting averages of every man on the team and followed the league race as close as anybody. She knew a lot more about baseball than plenty of managers I've seen.

It was such a close thing between Moran and Nolan that it looked as though it might go extra innings. She treated them both alike, and they got to hating each other like poison. It seemed to spur them on, though, instead of making them fall down in their playing.

Moran was putting up a swell game at the first station, getting their high and low and out to one side, besides clouting the leather at a point-three clip. Nolan had an edge on him at that. After he got to going good he made it plain enough that he was no common base league pitcher and that he had a future if he took care of himself. He was the best twirler in the league easy, and after awhile he got so that he won about every game he pitched. He came to be a kind of idol among the Plymouth fans, and it swelled him up some too.

Well, we climbed up from fourth place until we were running neck and neck with Corydon for the pennant, and as we moved up Nolan seemed to move up ahead of Dan Moran in the race for the Moriarty pennant. I was rooming with Dan, and I noticed that he was pretty blue at times, but he never gave up.

"The game's never over till the last man's out in the ninth," he'd say, and he kept on being with Julia Moriarty as much as he could, which wasn't much, there being nothing slow about Nolan.

"I don't believe she's in love with him," I used to tell Dan to cheer him up, you know. Privately I had my doubts. "It's just the girl in her. Nolan's the whole cheese in this town now, and she likes to have it seen that he's her property. It makes the other girls feel bad."

Things ran along this way until here we were at the end of the season and the race for the rag still up in the air. The Corydon bunch and us was so close together that it would take the closing series of three games to decide it. The series was to be played at Plymouth, and as our manager decided to pitch Nolan in two of the games it looked like it was our pennant. Corydon sent a delegation over with a band, and things began to warm up.

Nolan pitched the first game, and we shut 'em out, 5 to 0. They took the second one from us, 6 to 5, and that put it all up to the third game. Corydon had saved up his best pitcher, Hart, and he was no slouch either. Nolan was in fine shape, though, and we felt as confident as anybody who knows the game ever can feel.

Isn't it funny when something big is about to be pulled off and you're plugging your best to have things go right that they go dead wrong? The night before the game I'd got into bed and Dan was getting ready to when a gust of wind came through the open window, slammed the lace curtains against the gas jet and in a second there was a blaze. Dan was right there, though, tearing down the curtains and stamping on them, and the fire was soon out.

"Take a look at this," he said when the excitement was over, holding out his right hand.

I nearly threw a fit when I saw it. It was burned something fierce.

"You can never play with that," I told him. You see, it was what we call his "meat" hand that was burned. If it had been his left hand that he wore the big mitt on it wouldn't have been so bad.

"Who else is there to play?" he said. "I've got to do it."

He went out to a doctor, and I sat in bed thinking. I saw that we was up against it good and hard. The utility man was in the hospital, and neither of the pitchers could play first worth a whoop and were weak with the willow.

When Dan came back he had his hand all bandaged up.

"I'll have some extra thick ones put on tomorrow," he said, "and if the boys will throw to the left enough I guess the big mitt will carry me through."

Well, the big day came. There wasn't a vacant seat in the park, and talk about excitement—say, you've got to go out in the minors to get the real thing in that line. The big league towns ain't in it a minute with these little bums when it comes to going dippy over a ball team.

We was all a little worried over Dan's hand except Nolan, who sneered when he heard about it. But all the infielders promised to bear to the left on first base throws, and we figured that we would get through all right.

I was warming up near the grand stand when I heard my name called, and I turned to see Julia Moriarty right behind the netting on a front seat.

"What's the matter with Mr. Moran's hand?" she asked.

"Fire in our room last night," I told her. "Lace curtains blew into the gas jet, and Dan burned his hand something fierce putting it out."

"But he can't play, can he?" she asked, and I noticed she seemed sort of worried.

"He's going to play," I said, "and he'll be safe if the boys don't throw into his meat hand. We're taking special pains this afternoon to hit that big mitt of his. Don't you worry; we'll win this game all right."

The game got to going soon after that, and we run along five innings with nothing doing. Nolan and Hart were both in form and nobody got past second base. Dan was getting along fine at first, though he had to do some sidestepping at times.

When Corydon came to bat in the sixth something started. The first man up slammed a safe one to left field and reached first base. It was the first safety they'd got off Nolan, and it nettled him a little. He watched the base runner like a hawk and kept throwing to Dan to keep the man on first. I could see from second that these throws didn't bear any to the left either. I saw one of them get Dan square on the right hand. He held on to it, but I could see his face twitch. It must have hurt him something terrible. Well, the next man up drove a triple to the fence, and Corydon got the first run of the game. The three bagger man came home a moment later on a sacrifice.

We did some batting ourselves in the seventh and tied the score. Then in the eighth, with one man out, Corydon's left fielder got to first on an error by our shortstop. He took a good lead, and Nolan fired one at Dan to catch him. It caught Dan square on his sore hand, and he nearly doubled up in agony. The ball bounced away, and the Corydon man was safe on second. There were groans from the grand stand.

The next man up died at first, but the man on second took third on the play. The next batter sent a slow roller to Nolan. He picked it up and slammed it at Dan with all his might, aimed square at that sore hand. It looked like an easy out from the grand stand, and when Dan dropped it and the runner reached first, while the other man scored from third, there was an awful roar. My, but our roots were sore! It looked like an easy catch to them—that is, to most of them. A few real wise ones saw how Nolan had thrown the ball. The rest began yelling at Dan.

"Rotten!"

"Take him out!"

"Get a new first baseman!"

It hurt Dan, too, as much as the throw had done. It was the first time they had ever roasted him that way. You can't blame them so much, though. They didn't know about his hand, except that it was tied up, and they weren't next to Nolan's tricks.

After all, though, it didn't matter. We hit Hart to the woods in our half of the eighth and sent two men across the plate. That made it 4 to 3 in our favor.

Corydon came to bat in the ninth with everybody holding his breath, and Nolan made a finish that was a corker. I have to admit it—he sure was a pitcher. What does he do now after two men had got on bases and nobody was out but strike out three of their best hitters in succession! That won the game and the pennant.

Everybody went crazy. The crowd swooped down on the field and carried us off on their shoulders—all except Dan. He disappeared in some way or other.

Maybe you think he wasn't blue that evening.

"Well, I suppose the stuff's all off," he said. "Nolan's a hero and I'm a

That humus-decaying vegetable mold—is a requisite for the proper growth of vegetable life is shown nicely when a crop such as corn is planted on spots which have been scraped off in the process of leveling a piece of land. dub. Not much trouble about a choice there, is there?"

"I don't know about that," I answered. "This young lady in question is pretty keen on the game. Maybe she's next to the way he was throwing to you most of the afternoon."

Nothing could cheer him up, though, and, on the level, it did look as though Nolan had things clinched.

I suggested that we take a walk, and off we started. Lots of fans tried to stop us on the way to play the game over again conversationally, but we shook them off and went on down the street. Pretty soon we came to a soda fountain place and went in to get something to drink. They had the back end fixed up with palms and rubber plants and such things, pretty good for a town like Plymouth. It looked cool, and we went back and sat down.

The very first thing we heard was Nolan, sitting behind a palm, telling Miss Julia all about it.

"It ought to have been 4 to 2 instead of 4 to 3," he was saying. "That big stiff Dan Moran tried his best to throw the game. Notice how he dropped those easy ones at first?"

"YOU'RE A LIAR, NOLAN," HE SAID, "AND YOU KNOW IT!"

"I understand his hand was badly burned," said Miss Julia, sort of stiff-like. "No wonder he couldn't hold them."

Nolan laughed like he was tickled to death.

"Burned nothing!" he snorted. "His hand is as good as mine. Crooked work, that's what it was."

It was around the palm by this time shaking his good fist in Nolan's face.

"You're a liar, Nolan," he said, low, but fierce, "and you know it!"

I think Nolan was going to soak him, but just then Miss Moriarty sort of took charge of the whole affair. She stepped right between them, took Dan by the arm, looked smilingly at him and said, "Will you please take me home, Mr. Moran?"

It all happened quicker than it takes to tell it. They went out, Dan with a look on his face that was dazed, foolish and happy all mixed up. Then I told Nolan what I thought of him, and we went out behind the store and had a go that the proprietor and his clerks stopped just as it was getting interesting.

Well, that was all there was to it. Nolan's in the big league now, but Dan is better off still. He's got a life contract with a manager that Nolan couldn't sign with.

Milton's Natural History.

The pigeons that found nesting places in St. Paul's cathedral were probably the only species of bird with which Milton was familiar in his early years unless we make an exception of the ubiquitous sparrow. He went in his seventeenth year to Cambridge, where he made acquaintance with the sedge flats of the Cam and took as much interest in birds and flowers, beasts and trees as his greater interest at that age in literature and philosophy would permit. But for him the most accurately observant period of life for nature study was over—the period of from eight to sixteen years of age—and he therefore fell into mistakes in his use of imagery and description of natural objects. He strews, for example, the laureate hearse of Lycidas with flowers that are not all in bloom at the same season; he gives the lark's nest a thatched roof, and he calls the honeysuckle eglandine.—Scotsmen.

Leaps of the Salmon.

Extraordinary stories are often told of the wonderful leaps by which salmon ascend waterfalls. Professor H. B. Ward has studied the salmon of southeastern Alaska, and he says that these fish do not choose a particular point of attack in endeavoring to surmount a fall. They show a remarkable lack of accuracy as well as of definiteness in their movements. When trying to ascend a fall they sail through the air, with the body rigid and the fins spread and held tense, and the instant the momentum of the jump is lost, they impart a rapid and powerful vibration to the tail, and this occurs whether the jump is successful or not. If the fish reaches solid water at the top of the fall this motion insures the maintenance of its position. In open water they jump sideways instead of lengthwise, and there is no movement of the tail.

Women are today playing a prominent part in the improvement and beautifying of towns. In Burlington, N. J., a number of women members of the congregation of a prominent church of that place undertook the job of painting their edifice last campaign of church improvement should fall through by a lack of funds. Headed by the pastor's wife, they bravely set to work with paint pots and brushes and then formed a pin money fund to employ a man to decorate the top of the building.

Gates, Painted and Unpainted.

The question as to whether a gate shall be painted or left rough is a matter which must be decided by the individual, but it is to be feared that in nine cases out of ten the only time a great many of the gates on the farm have a coat of paint is before they are hung, and a gate that has been unpainted for years is quite as unsightly. If not more so, as a well made rough gate. In addition to this, it is worth remembering that a rough gate is much less liable to crack and let in the wet than one which has been painted and then allowed to remain for years without being touched with paint.—American Cultivator
